EMPLOYMENT HISTORY

Year Of Exprience	5

Background	From a young age, I was immersed in the bustling world of my father's general material shop. Nestled in the heart of the community, the shop was more than just a place for transactions; it was a hub of activity, a source of support for local builders, craftsmen, and DIY enthusiasts. Being part of this environment has profoundly shaped my character, instilling values of independence, hard work, and a reverence for rules and regulations. Working in the family business from such a young age taught me the essence of independence. Rather than spending my childhood idly, I learned to take initiative and contribute positively to a shared goal. As I stocked shelves and assisted customers, I realized that my efforts directly influenced the shop's success. This hands-on involvement cultivated a sense of ownership in me that many peers my age did not experience. I wasn't just a child waiting for adulthood to arrive; I was an active participant in the family's livelihood, learning early on that my actions could make a difference.
